Fred Herzog

Fred Herzog was born in Germany in 1930, and immigrated to Vancouver, BC in 1953. Throughout his career he worked almost exclusively with Kodachrome slide film, and only in the past decade did technology allow him to make archival pigment prints that match the exceptional colour and intensity of the Kodachrome slide. Herzog's use of colour was unusual in the 1950s and 60s, a time when art photography was almost exclusively associated with black and white imagery. In this respect, his photographs can be seen as a pre-figuration of the "New Colour" photographers of the 1970s.

-starting to think about ways to make the ceilings cost-effective, effective for lighting, plus not unexciting... I am a fan of the slatted type for sure

MB20181017_Barnard_IMG_6951.jpg

-some form of vertical element in the main bullpen space would be a handy thing to have to help break up the expanse plus act as a layering effect..couple of styles here

MB20191214_Equinox_IMG_5517_2.jpg

-a dramatic wall on portion of a hallway would be a nice feature

-I like this layout for a hallway or junction area perhaps

-and I do love concrete.. it goes very well with wood, painted drywall, and pretty much everything!

MB20181017_Barnard_IMG_8269.jpg

-like the way the space is utilized in these two pics... again openness but divided spaces, and on the left the vertical dividing wall allows for movement in the depths beyond...

MB20200222_Equinox_IMG_8168.jpg

MB20200923_ForgeNYC_IMG_5895.jpg

-thought the idea of an elevated work area in one corner with a view beyond could be interesting... I also like the slatted ceiling detail

NMAAHC_014.jpg

-wonder if a patterned element of some type might be nice as a gobo-type effect for lighting?

-examples of utilizing glass to seperate spaces while still keeping an openness and depth-

Ok I really like the feel of this.. an office/boardroom/what have you space, that is essentially in the middle of things, so you can get some great depth/motion going on in multiple layers...

Add glass panels that can slide open or closed, and if desired have window treatments of some type or even electrically fogged like Keeley's office in Ted Lasso?

-nice space utilization, again with using glass as a way to divide spaces whilst keeping the space open...
